ioneer thanks Patrick Elliot for contribution to company after he resigns from non-executive director role

The company is well-placed to capitalise on demand recovery and likely supply shortages, as governments increasingly consider incentive schemes to rapidly reduce reliance on fossil fuels and lower greenhouse gas emissions.

ioneer is expected to be the first new lithium chemicals producer in the US in more than 60 years. iioneer Ltd's (ASX:INR) (OTCMKTS:GSCCF) (FRA:4G1) long-serving and valued director Patrick Elliot has retired from his position on the board for personal reasons.

Elliot has served on the board as a non-executive director for 17 years and his retirement is effective immediately.

Executive chairman James D Calaway praised Elliot for his many years of service to the company, and noted that he had served on the board with distinction.

“Cherished member of the board”

He said: “Pat Elliott has been a cherished member of our board, always willing to do the work and always providing wise counsel to enhance shareholder value.

“I know that I speak for all directors in saying that Pat will be greatly missed - we all wish Pat the best as he pursues his private life to the fullest.”

“Significant contribution”

Managing director Bernard Rowe said: “I have worked closely with Pat since listing the company on the ASX in 2007 through to today, where we are on the cusp of developing our Rhyolite Ridge Lithium-Boron Project.

“I would like to thank him for the significant contribution he has made to the company over the last 17 years.

“I have deep admiration and respect for Pat and I wish him the very best in his retirement.”
